Secessionists are very bold. Unnowlets trustful and undaunted. [From the Louisville Journal of yesterday.]

Gen. Bregg massed his army at Chattanoo-ga and Knoxville, East Tennessee. The col-

with but one natifie of any consequence, that of Tanewell, effected the design of getting into his rear and then further into Kentucky. All the details of his movement are familiar to our readers. The other two copys have moved with equal secresy and effect, and are now attempting a junction with Sanith. The army of Major General Brage is divided into three corps of armse under Major Generals Wm. J. Hardee, Leonidas Poix, and Kruy Smith. Each of these corps would number about $15.00 men, if the regiments were fail, but it is not probable that, of this whole army, do,000 effective infanity can be brought into action. The cavalry force of the two cores, under Hardee and Pope, is estimated at 5,000, and it is known that they have each three batteries of light artillery, and several pieces of heavy guns. Among the division commanders in Hardee's corps are 8. B. Backner, Henry W. Hillard, and a brigadier-general Slaughter. This Slaughter we cannot recall to mind, and it has been suggested to as that Savage of Tennessee, is meant. With Buckner our readers are familiar. It is rumored he has been mance a mojor-general. There is little doubt that he commands a division of this army, organized to penetrate a country with which he is so intimately sequented, and in which, were it uncless to dony, he has a wide-spread and evil influence over certain classes of people. Cheatham, of Fennessee, Are derson, of Pennesseo not over the samp of Tennessee, have divisions in Polik's coaps. While the two copps of this army thus organized under Hardee and Polk, Brage, on or about it e 350 of August, crossed the Fennessee R ver at Harrison, a few miles above Chattences, the stream at that time being easily forded. On the evening of the 37th of August he had marghed weekward by the mountain road to Dunlap. At the time of reaching this point, our horomant first saw them, and, lying in the bushes near town, marked them go by. He counted forty pieces of fiel artillery, he had anarched west-ward by the monutain road to Dunlap. At the time of reaching this point, our informant first saw thom, and, lying in the busbes near town, marked them go by. He counted forty pieces of field artillery, dive regiments of suntage and the suntage interest of the transparent of him to be nearly or quite full. He represents that the men were well armed and the cavalry well mounted. The batteries were very complete, all the appointments being new age full. The regiments moved with but three wagons each, and it was stated in Dunlap that the officers were allowed to early little or no bagyage. The troops were provided with large tarpaulins, which they stretched from tree to tree, and under which whole companies can sleep in comfort. The wagons were used to hant forage, the ten tarpaulins of a regiment risking up but little room. The men irved off the country. Many of the infantry were mounted on horses with bridges improved from ropes and the litte. The whole force moved speedily up the valvey of the country and on the sound of the country was nowing northeast towards force was thrown forward toward McMinnyille and Nashville from Fikeville. The rebel cavalry made an advance far towards McMinnyille, and one or two smart shirmless from the pinks. This plan worked very well, until Buells underly withdrew from northern Alabams, concentrated his forces and fell back on Nashville. Bragg did not anticipate this movement; hence he was forced to push forward to the assistance of Saith, or leave the army of the latter in danger of being cut off. He moved accordingly, but Gen. THE BUIN OF THE COUNTRY.

"The country has been ruined by fault finding sir; utterly ruined, by lack of confidence of the people in their ruiers,"—was the emphatic remark of an elderly gentleman of purpy structure, and plethoric in purse. He gave accent to his utterance by the swing of a stout gold headed cane, following up his sweeping charge with a sweep of the staff, as if he longed to use it over the shoulders of parties guilty in form and manner as set down.

The elderly man walked testily away as if the terminus of argument had been reached and there was nothing more to say. It is noticeable in this case, as we come to review it, that this old gentleman, the solid appresentative of a solid class of community, loyal citizens all, stood side by side with those he complained of, in one respect

The opinions of the president and of Gen. Halleck have not changed; their action has, and, as I have said before, uccessarily, incritably so. If the army, or any considerable portion of it, will fight under one man, and will not fight under fight under one man, shd will not fight under another, what can be done, at this crisis, but humor them? The country must get a fight out of them, at whatever sacrifice. But who is responsible for this humilisting state of things? And to what consequences are likely to flow from 1t? The commander-in-chief is responsible. Had he been com-mander-in-chief in fact, as in name from be-clusting, bud he ordered his concernic what to mander-in-chief in fact, as in mams from beginning; had he ordered his generals what to do as not what to do, and punished the slightest act of disobedience or Insubordination by them as the most severe disciplinarians among them, punish their subordinates, had he in a word showa decision or digraity of character in his relations with military commanders, had he left his foot where he put it down and not yielded in lessor things, he would not have been obliged to yield in this great one. The last favor it is difficult to refuse, when allig but the last have been granted. It frequently takes the president a long while to make up his mind; but it takes him much longer to translate his conclusion into action. He determined to remove Frement soon after the fall of Lexington, but it was six weeks before he did it. Long ago he made up his mind that McCiellan was not the man under whose command a great army would "stack, pursue, and destroy the enemy wherever he could be found," but he allowed him frequently to disobey orders and to add impertinence to disobedience, without rebuke.

Thaddens Stevens on the War Policy of the Government.

Thaddeus Stevens, of Pennsylvania, having eceived a meanimous re-nomination for Congresss from the Union men of his district, as cepted it in the following speech, delivered before the convention, in which he discusses the policy of the government with great bold-

"FELLOW CITIZENS: I have come for the purpose of thanking you and accepting your nomination. It is always gratifying to a public man to be assured of the continued condidence of those whose servant he is, but especially so in times like these, when the wisestmen differ on questions of policy. I had prepared to speak on those questions, and to criticise, not in a fulsome manner, but as I thought it deserved, the conduct of the war and the present policy of the administration; but in the last hour I have hesitated whether to speak as I had intended—whether it were and the present policy of the administration, "but in the last hour I have hesitated whether to speak as I had intended—whether it were proper to criticise now, in this hour of deep-est-gloom, when we know not where our armes are, but only that they are nowhere successful. But whether we advise the government, or find fault with it, we must all do everything to strengthen the hands of our rastion. Let us not despair; life is not all sunshine—it has gloom with joy, adversity with presperity—nor is the victory always to the flust—human energy and carnectness will often wrest from fate what would seem to belong to justice alone. Possibly we have not yet suffered enough; but let no market in his loyalty to the government, no matter how he may criticise its policy; for he who fatters now is a traitor not only to his country but to humanity and to his God.
